Tech changes everything. It allowed Korea to jump from a developing country to a global leader.

Through education and research Korea became a top producer and programmer of machines that used a new language, digital code.

But, as Charles Darwin said: it is not the strongest that survive, but those best able to adapt.

Education must adapt to ever faster tech cycles, teaching the next generations how to better understand synthetic biology, life code, robotics, and brain research.

These are some of the fields that will generate some of the world's next trillion-dollar companies and help build the world's dominant economies.

It will also change each of our lives and even our sense of what is right and wrong.

This session will focus on how tech changes economies and countries and what is coming next.
